How peseta fall will aid holidays By Patricia Tisdali

Hopes that big cuts in wine and holiday prices would result from the devaluation of the pesset faded yesterday as suppliers spelled out the arithmetic behind their prices.

The Spanish government's devaluation of almost 20 per cent will boost some tour holiday operators' internal fin-ances. But because almost all the big package holiday opera-tors are offering fixed price guarantees, most of the savings will not be passed on until next summer. Holidaymakers, however, will find the pound worth nearly 150 pesetas compared with 119 last week.

As it is estimated that the average family spends between 2100 and 2150 in foreign cur-rency on holiday in addition to the tour price, the savings here could be up to 530.

Organizations representing more than 220,000 professional and salaried people have asked to meet the Chancellor of the Exchequer to explain their growing concern over the effects of flat-rate income restraint on their members.

None of the organizations, representing scientists, doctors, bank staff and engineers, is affiliated to the TUC and their entry into the arena will add to the difficulties faced by Mr Healey in trying to reach an agreement limiting wage rises to a maximum of 10 per cent.

One of the six organizations concerned, the Confederation concerned, the Confederation nion of incomes policy, many of of Eank Staff Associations, has our members have suffered a

> The Party Conference passed the proposal—although the Government is against it and the Prime Minister called it "an electoral albatross."

We, the banks listed below, believe that public ownership of banks is a matter for public discussion. We would therefore like to question some of the NEC's basic assumptions and also ask. you what you think—whether you are for or against bank nationalisation.

MONOPOLY MONEY.

The NEC claims that the present situation "has put into the hands of the banks and other financial institutions a vast concentration of private power"

Yet, if the big four really share a virtual monopoly between them, could the Government—by owning them all —fail to enjoyan even greater monopoly?

But what of the NEC's assertion? Is it even true?

At the end of 1975, £74 billion was deposited with the main financial institutions in the UK. Of this, the clearing banks held 29 per cent only

DOBANKS REALLY COMPETE?

At present you have a choice among any of the main High Street banks named below. They compete with building societies, Trustee Savings Banks, National Savings, unit trusts, finance houses, foreign banks and the Post Office Giro for your money. And they compete with each other.

THEBATTLE OF THE HIGH STREET.

But, with 12,000 branches of these banks up and down the country, it is often at local level that competition is most real.

A CHOICE SIR? OF COURSE! WE HAVE FORM 4798/8C2 IN BUFF, GREY CR THE STANDARD OFF WHITE"

Take a town like Luton. It has a population of 165,000 and 26 bank branches. Someone wanting to open an account or wanting to borrow money could go to any of these branches. Or, for certain services, to one of the competitors already named.

It's the same all over the country. Most bank branches are small, often not much bigger than the shop next door. And the local branch manager is given a lot of freedom. He is expected to make a success of his branch—to understand his customers, to know about local industry and business. Competing—as at present—against other local bank branches, he soon loses customers if he gives poor service or is unreasonably cautious about

The NEC document offers few clues on freedom of choice or how nationalisation would help customers. Indeed it rarely mentions them. All it says is that the separate identities of the banks would be retained. But would it be real competition if the difference were in name only?

WHERE WOULD THEY GO?

The NEC first contemplated nationalising only one bank. But they recognised that most customers would switch to the other banks. So they are now proposing the nationalisation of the Big Four.

Their instinct was sound. Recent market research has already shown that 55 per cent of customers say they would probably not stay with their bank if it were nationalised.

It is not difficult to imagine where the grass would seem greener. There are many alternatives for personal customers, and business customers could turn to the 300 or so merchant and foreign banks in the City.

About one in seven of bank customers have changed banks at some time in their lives-28% because they thought another bank would give them better service.

PUBLIC DISCUSSION.

Over 10,000 people have already sent us their own views on the Banks Debate.

What do you think about the issues raised here?

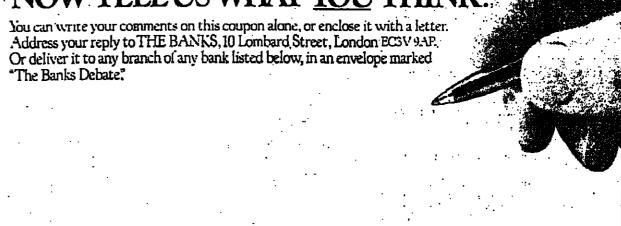

How would nationalisation affect competition between banks? Would branch managers be able to exercise as much personal judgement? Would services grow better or worse?

If you have views on these questions—whether for or against bank nationalisation—please let us know. It will increase our understanding of public opinion on this important issue.

We will do our best to answer every correspondent.

Ferry strike goes on at Harwich

Hundreds of passengers booked to sail on British Rail's Sealink ferry services spent Monday night on board the St Edmund et Harwich, Suffolk, because of an unofficiel strike by seamen. Yesterday all Seelink vessels were lying idle at Harwich.

The dispute is over extra pay for late arrivals. It began on Sunday and by yesterday involved almost 600 seamen when members of the crews of two more British Rail ferries, the Norfolk and the Rhodri Mawr came out in smpathy with men of the St Edmund and St George.

British Rail said an offer had been made to the men but nate been rejected by the National Union of Seamen.

The dispute began on board the St George, the second of Sealink's fermes, when the crew refused to sail from Harwich tothe Hook of Holland as a reserve vessel.

A representative of the strikers said: "Ships have been arriving late in port and management have nor been paying for the extra time involved, contrary to a national agreement concluded between them and the National Union

"Five other Sealink ships operating from Harwich have supported us and they will not be sailing until this matter is resolved."

May we suggest some additions to the considerations your clients generally apply to making bequests? In the changing conditions of today, we believe that it is wise to add the following questions:

1. Does the charity serve those in the greatest need, now and in the future? Old people suffer the greatest deprivation almost everywhere—their health, housing, warmth and loneliness are usually at the end of the queue.

Time is not on their side—Help the Aged is, 2. Does the charity mobilise volunteers to increase its effectiveness? Help the Aged is helped by thousands of dedicated people, young and old. This is why it achieves so much with each £ donated.

3. Does the organisation show practical initiative in changing circumstances?

In the last ten years alone Help the Aged has pioneered nation-wide flats for needy old people, day centres for the lonely, mini-buses for the housebound, a volunteer-distributed newspaper helpful to the old, aid for day hospitals, extra geriatric research, international help, and much

4. Will the value of the bequest be greatly reduced by inflation? This aspect is given great attention by Help the Aged trustees. They endeavour to use funds for work that will give enduring benefit, and therefore will grow in value. ••

Can the donor retain a personal association with the work helped?

Help the Aged welcome such a link, for the charity sees itself as a channel for the compassion and goodwill of its donors. A whole scheme for the elderly in the UK can be named in conjunction with a £200,000 bequest; £150 inscribes a name on the dedication plaque of a day centre; £100 names a hospital bed in Asia or Africa.

Among the well-known people who endorse the value of a legacy to Help the Aged are Lord Shawcross, Lord Gardiner (the charity's president), Lady Spencer-Churchill, and General Sir Brian Horrocks.

Full details and an Annual Report & Accounts gladly sent on request to: The Hon. Treasurer, The Rt. Hon. Lord Maybray-King, Help the Aged, Room T2L, 32 Dover Street, London WIA 2AP.

The commissioner told the Conservative Group for Europe in London on Monday that to win a butter subsidy Mr Silkin had "brought the negotiation of the last price package almost to the point of breakdown". Mr Silkin, who was president of the council of EEC farm ministers for six months until June, said at the Great York-shire Show, at Harrogate: "If you look at what nappened during the presidency you will find that there has been the lowest institutional price increase since we joined the Common Market. You will also find that a number of British institutions that are of great importance to us have been maintained and strengthened. We managed to stop the marga-rine tox and we managed to stop the han on dairy farm

Two changes in EEC farm policy that would restrict its benefit to farmers were pro-posed yesterday by Professor John Marsh, Professor of Agricultural Economics He said at a meeting organized by the Royal Institute of International Affairs, at Chatham House, in London, that the Community should try to reduce "mountains" of food by cancelling its offer to support markets by buying as much as farmers cared to produce. "When the Community fixes its annual prices it should specify the maximum quantity it would be prepared to buy", he said.

Mr Strang, Parliamentary Secretary at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and leader of the British delegation at the 1977 farm price review in Brussels, said the cut in support prices in real terms made this year was an important step towards reducing

Bill 'could be mockery | Miniature to hopes of homeless'

On at least three, ministers have made clear privately that they will be tabling amend-ments, although the official line is that they are generally satis-fied with the state of the Bill, subject to the tightening of a few clauses. Mr Preeson, Minister for Housing and Construction, has publicly stated his objections to the clause excluding from help people judged by local councils to have made them-selves homeless deliberately.

The charities yesterday called for Mr Freeson's formula to be included in the Bill by incorporating the legislative equiva-lent of the 1974 circular issued by Mr Rossi, then a junior minister. The circular said: "In the last resort, if homelessness becomes a real prospect, even if it does seem to have been self-inflicted, councils should give the degree of help necessary to secure that people are not left without shelter." The charities rold Mr Ross yesterday that nothing less would be satisfactory.

M Mitterrand draws a sombre picture of French economy

From Charles Hargrove

M François Mitterrand, the Socialist Party leader, said that at Carpentras M Giscard against more than half the people of France. He had spoken like the captain of the Government majority, the president of the right and of the

He would be no more than that so long as he did not "accept the left as a natural and necessary component of the French nation. M Minterrand said in a comment on the Presi-

The Socialist leader went on to draw a sombre picture of the economic situation. Infla-tion by the end of the year would be 10 per cent instead of the lower figure predicted, 100,000m francs (£12,000m); the foreign debt would exceed the trade deficit would exceed 19,000m francs, according to the CECD; industrial production

M Mitterrand said the tax council in its recen treport, had confirmed the Socialist Parry's criticism of tax evasion. In the 15 years that M Giscard d'Estaing had been responsible almost uninterruptedly for taxation policy, company tax had increased half as tast as income tax.

it as merely the means to an end.

The dispute began openly on March 3, 1975, when the management decided to drop its broadsheet publication and change to rabloid, abolishing 22 daily regional editions. At the time the newspaper was selling 900,000 copies and claimed more than a million and a half readers.

As part of the change 52 Journalists and 233 of the 600 print workers were to lose their job. As a result a work to rule started. It finally led, on May 6, 1975, to an occupation of the printing works in the Rue d'Enghien.

To keep public attention focused on the dispute, the workers carried out some spectacular stunts. In September, 1975, they invaded the Paris Stock Exchange. As a result one senior policeman and one other man died of a beart

Then, last January M Emilien Amaury, the owner of the newspaper, was killed in an accident while horseriding. His successor, M Bellanger, appears to hve taken a less rigid line in negotiations.

Quietly and with little publicity the talks have continued and have led to the agreement.

This grants 110 workers a job from August 1, and gives other work or early retirement to another 300.

The conditions of work and employment are to be the same as for the rest of the Paris press, so that salaries at the newspaper's plant at Saint-Ouen will be increased by 15 per cent.

Despite the claims of the CGT that this represents total victory, M Bellanger does seem to have won some concessions.

Of the 110 workers he has agreed to take on, only 62 will work for Le Parisien Livere, while the others go to work on while the others go to work on other newspapers.

He also claims to have broken the closed shop imposed by the CGT. Just how much each side has won remains to be seen.

The Government, which will have to pay the bill for early retirement, has not yet said that it will accept the agreement, but the signs are that it will do so.

Paris, July 12.—An appeal court today ruled that the satirical weekly Le Canard Enchaine had no case against government counter-intelligence agents whom it accuses of bugging its offices in Paris four years ago.

Counsel for the weekly announced that he would appeal in a higher court. Today's ruling, he said, "confirms that the police is all-powerful in the eyes of the judicial system".

The court ruled that investigation had failed to support the magazine's allegations against the agents in question. Moreover, the demand for a subpoena on the agents went beyond the powers of an examining magistrate.—Agence France-Presse.

We've been selling programmes to the USA for years. But never before in this way: 13-week runs of two-hour presentations.

So, regularly on Sunday nights, ten million Los Angeles viewers can sit down and watch two hours of British programmes.

American interest in Thames output has rocketed since we took over a New York television station for a week last year to showcase our programmes.

The Los Angeles season is one result of that enterprise. Other big cities like Chicago and Detroit, and the national networks, are enthusiastic. And we'll be in New York again later this year.

Yet in all this we're not making a single production especially for America. We're selling the programmes we make in London for British viewers.

In Los Angeles, the entertainment capital of the world, they wouldn't have it any other way...

Judges offer | In brief solution to Quebec dispute

From Our Correspondent Ottawa, July 12

The beginning of a solution to the explosive issue of bilingual air control services at Montreal may have been achieved with the interim report of a commission appointed last sum mer. The commission, composed of three judges, has recommen-ded the introduction of bilingual procedures for aircraft operat-ing under visual flight rules.

Mr Otto Lang, the Transport Minister, tabling the report in the Commons, said the recom-mendations had the Government's full support and were a "significant step towards re-solving the issue ... without jeopardizing air safety."

Government plans to intro-duce French into air traffic services at Montreal caused a bitter, week-long strike by pilots and controllers a year ago which interrupted commercial aviation in many different parts of Canada.

Pilots and controllers argued that for safety reasons only English should be used in the busy airways in and round Montreal, though seven smaller Quebec airports were already using bilingual takeoff and landing procedures.

The dispute put severe strains on relations between Franch on relations between French-speaking and English-speaking Canada, and Mr Trudeau, the Prime Minister, described it as potentially the most divisive issue the country had faced since the Second World War conscription crisis.

Commercial air services re-turned to normal only when the Government promised to ϵ tablish the commission.

The commission recommends bilingual air traffic control services at St Hubert airport near Monreal one of the busiest in Canada although it handles mostly small privately owned aircraft. Bilingual services for visual flight rules aircraft passing through the control zone of Mirabel, Montreal's new international sizport, and within the Montreal radar service area, are also recommended.

No picture-book artist worthy of his calling should fluff his almost mandatory attempt at a counting book. deavours that recognize the potential of the theme Alex Brychta's Numbers One to Ten and Back Again (Dent £1.75) goes for a narrative approach. One man, with a potted plant, waits at a bus stop, eventually being joined by nine other associated characters, including a far man with three chins and a general with seven medals. With 10 people in the queue the bus company clearly feel that they can reasonably send a bus; everyone climbs on; and then, stop by stop, everyone climbs off again until only the fat man is left. He has been asleep and gets taken back to the stop that he started from.

Under the Autumn Garden, by Jan Mark (Kestrel Books, £2.95) has an Edwardian setting, Edwardian props, but not quite an Edwardian flavour. The style is general purpose children's, slightly commonplace: the characters are stock with a touch of the two-dimentowards the sea. To me some 35 years back that might have been just grand: I throve on Biggles, after all. Under the Autumn Garden lares a locality with shares a locality with Landslip—both are set near Norwich. It shares very little else and is, by what I now regard as reasonable standards, incomparably the better book. It is a kind of non-adventure story: almost nothing happens I am in no doubt which of these two appealed the more to me; what I wonder is whether the children to whom they are addressed will think the same. David Rees's Landslip is an adventure story. It garden of the abandoned house has an Edwardian serting. over most of its 176 pages, all earten of the abandoned nouse, to astonish everybody with some grand historic find. All he digs up is rubbish. A pro-mising cache of old bottles is purloined by the ever-present children of the local builder sional. Most of the book's in who happens to be working on terest lies in its events—what the house, making it and follows when some acres of the Matthew's into one.

section of the progress chart remains blank. Teachers are fed up and uncomprehending; parents too. The boy has done nothing and the irony is that in spite of all his labour, this is true; the excavation was a dream, an evasion of the demands of school, even if, at the end and secretly, it happens to pay off. But what, I wonder, will Jan Mark's readers make of this which seems to me more an realization about childhood than a child's? Will they appreciate the deadly accuracy her description of that blindness which enables Matthew not to understand until too late that the reason why the builder's kids are always there and such a pain is because their mother has run off. And will they recog-nize Mr Bagnall who curses his wife's horde of cats as a way of loving them? They may which case they are probably already as wise as most of their elders.

with a writer like Rosemary Sutcliff the reverse holds good.

Sutcliff the reverse holds good. In her latest volume in the series, Shifting Sands (£125), for instance, she tells the story of rivalry and tyranny in a Stone Age tribe on Orkney and the fatal incursion of the dunes upon Skara Brae. But such is her feel for the brave, the innocent, the sinister among her characters, and such is her gift mnocent, the sinister among her characters, and such is her gift for recreating a possible Times Past that—although her Antelope is nearly planned—one senses a larger book within the small one. In a companion volume, bowever, The Ice Palace (£1.25) Robert Swindells gets the balance about right gets the balance about right. His story of little Ivan, who journeys through the winter forest to rescue his brother from the demon Starjik, has an air of folk-tale about it. It mores from small demon to the start of the start moves from small drams to small drams and on to happy conclusion with the right kind of inevitability and Mr Swin-ceived their limitations. The Journey Back is a sequel to The Upstairs Room which won many prizes. It tells the story Anne Frank might have told had she survived. It can never be as poignant as the un-adorned writing of that tragic child, but it is a book which gh'ls, in particular, should find absorbing.

Dust of the Earth, another book from America, tells the story of a family's struggle for survival in the Badlands of South Dakota. Disunited, poor and accident prone, they inherit a run-down estate and learn how to become sheep farmers.

More important, they learn how to appreciate and love each other. Vera and Bill Cleaver specialize in stories about children with problems. They have packaged this book as the autopackaged this book as the autobiography of Fern Drawn, the over 30 and were educated in this country you will not, during your schooldays, have been on the receiving end of any thing even remotely resembling "political education". Cautionary tales of its misuse abound, of course—Hitler's intellectual rape of the innocents being but the peculiarly nasty precursor of a continuing series of indoctrination cam paigns now spreading under different banners many parts of the through

But in a relatively open, relatively civilized and relatively democratic country such as Britain this curricular gap is a great pity. If school, aim to turn out citizens, rather then subjects, they simply must grasp the nettle political education, if intelligently condusted, can effectively counter prejudice and the mindless polarizing of attitudes. And this kind of education has never been needed as much as it is now: ideally, teenagers should be taught to halance the politicians presentation of their ideologies with a lowerkey, more analytical approach. The mass media certainly will not do it for them.

Luckily, however, there are growing numbers of enlight ened souls who are attempting to do precisely this and pub-lishers, though necessarily slower off the mark, are beginning to provide appropriate materials. The first two items in Hamish Hamilton's new People and Politics series bode well for the titles to follow. Hugh Purcell's Fascism, despite some unfortunate generalizations to begin with, is little short of exemplary. It precedes its potted histories of fascism in Germany and Italy, and its mumbrail sketch of our own National Front, with a working definition of the term which is simple without being crude. To the racialist, nationalist and anti-communist components Purcell adds the off forgotten but usually addi-tional component of socialism, and while briefly examining several countries currently dubbed fascist he stresses the crucial distinction between totalitarian regimes and those which are merely authoritar-ian. "Fascist", as an all-pur-pose term of abuse, will not survive a careful reading of these pages.

Socialism by Richard Evans, is, perhaps inevitably, gently partisan. It is stronger on socialism's moral thrust and on the history of the trade unions and Labour Party than it is at anatomizing the many varieties achieves a great deal in its small compass. Socialism's theoretical contradictions, and concomitant practical flaws, are durifully set out, but their significance is a shade too readily skipped over.

The crandest altarpiece in the exhibition is shown in the section devoted to the draw-ings, although it is in fact so placed that visitors to the museum see it on entering: painted for the Augustinian Church in Antwerp in 1528, it is a stupendous canvas, conraining no fewer than 14 saints in addition to the Hely Family. and the presence in the exhibition of a proliminary drawing, a modello for the whole compo-sition and a study for Saints Sebastian and George make it possible to watch Rubens at work, as it were. It is a great pity that, presumably for un-derstandable conservation readerstandable conservation reasons, the drawings had to be exhibited separately, since in several other cases they relate to paintings exhibited: for example there are three studies for The Garden of Love (lent by the Prado), a vivid brush-and-ink sketch of the Earl of Arundel which relates to the oil sketch of the same sitter lent by the National Portrait Gallery, and a prelimtrait Gallery, and a preliminary pen, ink, and wash drawing for the remarkable Sam-son betrayed by Delilah that originally belonged to Nicolaas Rockox and dates from soon after the artist's return from Italy. Not all the drawings correspond to known pictures, however, so that the brilliant Hercules and Minerva repelling Mars, in which oil and possibly body colour are applied over black chalk, although recalling a theme dear to the peace-loving Rubens and treated by him on a number of occasions con he a number of occasions, can be appreciated purely for its im-pressive qualities of movement and dramatic tension.

Of the other exhibitions in Antwerp the most worthwhile is that in St. James's Church (until Seotember 19), although the building's permanent con-tents, which include a wonder-ful Calling of St Peter by Jordaens and some staggering sculpture in black and white marble, are more appealing than the assortment of ecclesiastical bric-a-brac that has been gathered together and meticulously catalogued, but only in Flemish, a language which no foreigner can reasonably be expected to know. For-tunately, the catalogue of the main exhibition is available in English and that of the per-manent old master collection of the Royal Museum in

The busy summer of Gillian Lynne

The last few days have been Broadway jobs choreographing more than usually active ones Pickwick and The Roar of the more than usually active ones for Gillian Lynne, the charcographer and director now virtucl'y in residence at the RSC: within a single week at the Aldwych she opened her A Midsummer Night's Dream (codirected with John Barton) and the musical of Comedy of Errors, communing between rehearsals and first nights to a television stud a where by way of a change from the Bard she's doing the dance routines have any doubts at all about for the ever successful Munper Show. To go from Timonia to a the script, then it's better just not to start, and lately there have been some terrible hand puppet in a single day must represent a sizable artistic journey, but it seems not to have confused Miss Lynne who is anyway more than a little familiar with the Dream since tion for Rudolph Cartier. Now divorced from the QC to whom she was married for many years, and without children of her own, Miss Lynne's life is totally wrapped up in the business she first joined as a young teenage dancer towards the end of the war. An only child whose marker had been killed in a morher had been killed in a car crash, she joined the Sadler's Wells ballet after privare lessons at a school in Bromley where among the other pupils was a young Beryl Grey. At the Wells under Ninette de Valois she danced her way through to the Queen in Giselle, sharing roles with Moira Shearer and Beryl Grey until they both fell ill on an American tour and Gillian Lynne was left dancing all the principal roles, an experience which strained her heart and forced her to leave the Wells in 1951.

she played Puck in a celebrat-ed 1958 BBC television produc-

"I had great thoughts of being a straight actress, so I went into Rep in Devon and played 21 the juvenile leads quite appalingly until one day they gave me an old lady to be and I realized that with all my dance training I could move in the right way, and that suddearly gave me the confidence I'd been lackig."

From there Gillian Lypne progressed to the Palladium, where they were in search of a resident ballerina to close the first helf before such visiting celebrities as Jimmy Durante; there she was seen by a talent scout from MGM who put her into The Master of Ballantrae opposite Errol Flynn. Not an unadventurous start for a lady who thought she was going be the next Jessie Matthews:

"After a while, though, I went back to ballet and began to choreography, first for the Western Theatre Ballet and then up on the Edinburgh Festival fringe where I staged Collages to music by Dudley Moore; David Memick saw that and gave me a couple of Greasepoint; at the same time I got a Cliff Richard film to do and suddenly all the work began to come in very fast." Gillian Lynne takes brighter view than most of the prospects for the English stage musical, though she has lately turned down four of them: "If it's a really good script then you still know you're going to have to work very hard to make it work; if you have been some terrible scripts around. People are still trying to do musical adapta tions of the classics or else appalling imitations of Super-star. We ought to have progressed beyond all that: musicals now are about a mood, not a whole lot of scenery or gyrating crowds. We need to get back to the idea of a small-scrie, lyrical entertainment: it's no good just plugging in the noise and the movement and hoping you'll get another Hair, because you won't. But the English musical thearre never seems to learn from its mistakes, the first of which is the apparent inability to find good writers. You can't imagine the joy of doing The Comedy of Errors and discovering that we were dealing with a writer who knew something about construction of plots. Given the right frame-work, English dancers can be just as exciting as Americans: Chorus Line, worked because the framework was right, not just because they were Broad-

Working with people at the RSC who are fundamentally actors and not singers or dancers does of course make a difference, and it makes the rehearsal period much tougher for them and for me, but I'd infinitely rather be working with an actor who can dance a little than with a dancer who can act a little. The cast of Comedy of Errors may not be able to dance up a storm, but because they make their characters so believable, that doesn't seem to much matter."

Gillian Lynne now has one of her own original ballets in the repertoire at the Sydney Opera House: called The Fool on the Hill and based on Beatles music from the Sixties, it started life as an award-winning television spectacular, and there is talk now of another new ballet for Chicago. Along the way, there are also regular dance and movement classes to be given to the RSC companies at Stratford and the Aldwych, and a whole new series of The Muppets to think about. All in all it is going to be another

Henry V Royal Shakespeare

Theatre, Stratford-on-Avon

Irving Wardle

Now entering on its third year of life, Terry Hands's famous production originally appeared in repertory with the two parts of Henry IV as the final chapter in the transformation of good King Hal. This time the play comes more obscurely at the beginning of a cycle, and it is hard to see what essential links Mr. Hands will be able to make with the three parts of

No doubt I shall regret those words by the end of the week; and in the meanwhile, the cycle has at least supplied a pretext for reviving this glorious piece of work with Alan Howard back in command of the title part.

Mr Hands's great achievement is to have produced a version of Henry V which manversion of neary which mais-ages to square ant-militarist scruples with a full-blooded treament of the great national folk take. Mr Howard's perform-ance is the main key to its success, but no Shakespearian hero was ever less of a one-man show. Mr Howard's success in reflecting the diversity of British character depends on the actual diversity of his sur-rounding company. And one sign of the production's strength is that its original statement remains intact des-pite wholesale cast changes.

Of the old Eastcheap gang, at least Tim Wylton's Bardolph survives, hobbling off to war on a stick, decomposed in every respect except his booming parade-ground voice. It will be a sad day when this mildewed figure finally leaves the stage as it has come to represent the presiding genius of Stratford's Earlish histories.

Mr Wylton's new comognious include Jeffrey Dench and Philip Dunbar, who play the Pistol-Nym quarrel with hilarious combination of fight ing words and wringing gesture; and Valerie Lush who offers a bourgeois Hostess in comparison with the late Maureen Pryor (inviting no laughs in the speech on Falstaff's death).

on French soil the group join with Barrie Rutter's Macmorris (characterized as a wild Irish bomber) and David Shaw-Parker's Jamy in the Parker's Jamy in the extravagant multi-regional contingent surrounding Geoffrey Hutching's Fluellen, an intense pedaragic figure who sees himself as the best man there but respects himself too much to resort to open competition until driven to it in the leek encode

Mr Hands excels in those scenes as he clearly relishes them and has no qualins about pushing his actors over the top. In any case, they have a safety net in Fluellen; and the result richly repays his trust in material that is often handled with embarrassment.

Mr Howard's performance remains the portrait of a new boy gradually discovering his gradually discovering his strength. The big turning points remain uneltered: as where he practically vomits after sentencing the English conspirators to death, and suffers agony in authorizing Bardolph's execu-tion with Pistol staring him accusingly in the eye. Apart from this actor's electrifying delivery—the most stirring voice the part has attracted since Olivier's—the excirement lies in repeatedly capping a moment of private doubt with a splendid public gesture; in-variably ostonishing himself in discovering he can make it. New to me in the night scene was the discovery of another face of the former Hal; borrowing old Erpingham's cloak to prowi round the camp fires just as in former days he put on drawer's apron at the Boar's through several years with Shakespeare's company, making way into innumerable academic treatises as a footnote, while the popular story of his nine-day Morris dence from London to Norwich made its way into folkiore. Chris Harris appears as Kemp, remi-niscing on the night before his triumphant entry into Norwich about the buxon woman who danced part of the way with him, about being snowbound for five days and about "Shake-rags", the "poxy quill pusher" who finally forced him out of the theatre for clowning too

It is a wonderfully sustained piece of clowning and storytelling, low art of a special sort, enlivened by bawdy and dancing and a fine disregard for Shakespeare. Mr Harris appears alone on the stage, drawing props and costumes from an ingenious box which brims with tools of the mirth-making busi-

For the other characters of his tale, he resorts to im-personation, sketching a chinscratching Shakespeare or an imperious Burbage with simple gestures and evocative voices. The trick that gives the show its greatest charm is the bal-ance Mr Harris maintains between the clowning and the shadow of Shakespeare's art. Perhaps Kemp was not so rough a clown as the show depicts, keen to insert a red nose, a funny har or a stuffed dog on wheels into Much Ado About Nothing or Romeo and Juliet for the sake of a laugh, but Mr Harris makes a case for Kemp as a groundling, the rough edge of a theatre that also resounded with Shake-Speare's words. I called the show low art, for Mr Harris keeps it that way by joking with the audience, de riding Shakespeare and trundling out the clown's basic tricks But Mr Harris and John David, the director, slyly educate with the text as they entertain with the performance, lucidly pre-senting plague-stricken London from its bear pits to its execuas director of the Royal Ballet, was given its premiere in Ballet Rambert's gala at the Round House on Monday, together with the London premieres of works by Christopher Bruce and Jaop Fher. Although an unusually sombre programme for a gala performance, it showed the company in a more interesting light than last week's offering.

The goddess who provides Morrice with his title and his theme is Aphrodite. He and his designer John Macfarlane allow themselves a hint of Botticelli in the opening section, with the immortal and her attendants in gauzy pleated chitons grouped before a sea shell, but already the sharp outline of the decor, scini-abstract in treatment, gives the clue to the unsentiapproach of collaborators.

Building up gradually from tiny movements to a frenzy, the women establish their dominance before any men appear. Then the victims come rolling in, like debris rolled by the tide across the sea's bed. They are bandaged and bloody, suffering already from love's wounds, the red seeping from their loincloths as well as their

At the heart of the work is a duet in which Lucy Burge as the goddess quietly and gently develops her command over Zoltan Imre as an all too Norman Morrice's Smiling Im-mortal, his last new work willing victim. Her smile, when before taking up his new post it eventually comes, is cold and

Christopher Bruce's Echoes of a Night Sky to three movements from Crumb's "Music for a Summer Evening", has one brief passage of such exhibitanting invention, when the women soar like to draw attention to the delirest, which unrolls so uniformly as to become soporifically monotonous. Revie: failed to carry over club success to international arena Football Correspondent Don Revie's letter of resignation England's manager arrived at Football Association's offices in London yesterday, confirming the overnight news that had taken officials by surprise. Some, in-cluding the chairman, Professor Sir Harold Thompson, were annoyed that Mr Revie's decision was first seen in the newspapers. All seemed agreed that a replacement had to be appointed quickly, Bobby Robson, the Ipswich Town manager, has emerged as the favourite although yesterday all he would say was: "It's nice to would say was: "It's nice to think I'm in the running." Rumours of Mr Revie's depar-ture began after England lost to Italy in Rome last November. That result almost certainly cost the team a place in next year's World Cup final competition in Argentina. After defeats by the Netherlands, Wales and Scotland ar Wembley later last season the ar Wembley later last season the England team went to South America feeling even more de-flated. Meanwhile, Mr Revie, travelled to Helsinkik where he watched Italy beat Finland 3—0. He thus missed seeing England draw with Brazil in one of their better performances and although the team went on to be unbeaten on tour, it was obvious on his rrival that Mr Revie was deeply devressed by having seen Italy reduce England's World Cup chances to a mathematical improbability. In fact, it was rumoured that while in Buenos Aires he discussed the tersm of his resignation with FA officials. Throughout his three years as manager Mr Revie was best by injuries to players who should have become the backbone of his 1978 World Cup team. The loss of Bell and later Francis particularly upset his planning, but the went on to be unbeaten of Bell and later Francis particularly upset his planning, but the rein of criticism against him was rooted in impatience with his frequent tampering of tactics and seemingly unforced team changes. came clear that England had vir-tually no chance of reaching the World Cup finals, but, officially, they stated that his dismissal would not be considered until after the game against Italy at Wembley next November. Dick Wrags, who is chairman of the international committee, gave him support and even yesterday said:

"There has been no approach to anybody so far. In fact we are anybody so far, in tact we are hoping to persuade Don to stay on and sign a new contract." However, he said that as England's next game was against Switzerland on September 7 it was important to find a new manager—if that, was necessary—as soon as possible and an emergency meet.

possible and an emergency meet-ing would be called.

Mr Wragg said members of the international committee were committee were international committee were "dreadfully disapopinted" by Mr Revie's decision. Surprise and a degree of amoyance were also reactions heard yesterday. Sir Harold Thompson said: "We are all very said that Mr Revie should not tell his employers before telling the newspapers what he is doing."

Ted Croker, the FA secretary, confirmed the arrival of Mr Revie's resignation letter and said it was totally unexpected. One of Mr Revie's closest colleagues during his time as manager of Leeds United and England was Leeds United and England was his assistant manager, Les Cocker, whom I would expect Mr Revie to want at his side when he returns to club management. Mr Cocker said he thought Mr Revie had done "a good job" and certainly many of the England players have remained loyol to the manager throughout the difficulties. They especially appreciated his keen eye for financial reward—the same keemess that through him, brought lucrative and criticized commercial contracts for the FA.

and criticized commercial contracts for the FA.

Michael Channon, who has occasionally captained the England team, said: "His biggest problem has been that he has not had a settled side. He did everything he could for the players and it's worth more to play for England now than when he became manager. He couldn't have done more he sometimes seemed oblivious of criticism but since leaving Leeds United for England in 1974 he has ager. He couldn't have done more for us in that respect. If he did make a mistake it was probably in leaving Alan Ball out of the side too early and not having any-one to replace him."

Ramsey. England had railed to qualify for the 1974 World Cup-and the FA decided to buy Mr Revie's services for about £25,000 a year. He signed a four-year contract and was expected to simulate a club attitude in an international environment. He soon found this almost impossible and was unable to lead England into the European championship last year. Defeat by Italy in Rome in the World Cup last November was, for many, proof that he had falled and the slight improvement

Although his record with England seemed adequate on paper (P 29, W 14, D 3, L 7, F 49, A 25) Mr Revie could not produce a team to compare with the best in the world and this was particularly nodesable in important matches against good-quality opposition. It could be argued that he inherited the England team at a time of impoverishment, and undoubtedly injuries checked him at every turn. However, as Joe Mercer said: "The world wants wanners."

Jack Charlton, another former England player, said when he left Middlesbrough last season that he did not expect to start work egain before November, which happens to be the month in which England play Italy, but finally the FA are likely to choose Mr Robson, thus again looking to Ipswich Town to provide success, as they did when appointing Sir Alf Ramsey.

What this last Tost match showed, as much as the insecurity of Australia's batting, was the extent to which they miss Lillee. Even when Thomson is making the batsmen hop they can comfort themselves with the I nowledge that the next over will contain nothing as torrid. With Lillee and Thomson in action together there was no such let-up. That is what proved so killing, even to West Indies with their great wealth of hotting. Indies with their great wealth or batting.

The pitch at Old Trafford was another which almost everyone got wrong—a case of mistaken diagnosts. If the Australians had known how it was to play they would, I am sure, have had Pascoe in their side. He is not a Lillee, as but he would have kept England ander greater pressure than Tony Greig, the deposed England captain, has been invited to appear before the disciplinary sub-committee of the Test and County Cricket Board early next week to discuss an article by Greig in a daily newspaper which criticized the Old Trafford pitch on the first day of the second Test. Greg Chappell, the Australian captain, said later: "Our appli-cation was faulty. You have got to give it all you have got for five days in a Test and we did not. Overnight, Essex had been 154 for three, in their second innings, still 14 runs behind. They batted with a judicious mixture of adventure and care. Fletcher held one end, though he never disdained a stroke when he saw an opportunity. He was there to save the match, if the possibility of winning it departed. At the other end, his batsmen were permitted more liberty, and made more mistakes, Gooch was fourth out, at 181: Gooch was fourth out, at 181; Denness fifth out, second ball after lunch, at 251, both with aggressive Intentions. Middlesex had begun to look as though they were waiting for a declaration, though they had no right to expect one, since they had batted on for a long lead in the first innings, in the hope of bowling Essex out quickly as the pitch broke up, which it manifested outward and visible signs of doing.

Forty years ago I was warned by a Sunday school teacher that it was dangerons to swim near Southend Pier, because it might fail on your head at any time. Yesterday morning I saw a clieerful little train thundering along it. On Monday morning I was told by an Essex man that the game would be over by tea, so bad was the pitch. But on the last two days only 20 wickets fell, and nearly all of them because the batsmen were chasing runs.

Fiencher's innings was not one

Chance for Britons to gain glory in the field

The situation is that Britain have to finish in the first two of the eight participating rations the eight participating nations this weekend to qualify direct for the final in Helsinki on August 13 and 14. Of the seven visiting teams, most of whom arrive on Friday, one of the biggest surprises is that Eamonn Coghlan, who ran 3min 53.4sec for the mile behind John Walker in Dublin on Monday night, is nominated by the Republic of Ireland only for the 800 metres, with Raymond Flynn septions of freiand only for the 800 metres, with Raymond Flynn taking on the 1,500 metres.

The Sotiet Union have not nominated their 18-year-old protége, Vladimir Yashenko, who this month set a world record in the high jump of 75t 75in. Instead they have chosen the former European record holder, Aleksander Grigoryev, whose best of 75t 65in should be more than necessary to win the event.

Michael Whitaker on Brother Scot, got her nose in front by 0.9 of a second, and kept it there, despite a strong challenge from David Broome, who finished third on Heatwaye. Heryey Smith was not among the six to qualify for the barrage over Major Reg. Whitehead's fences, strategically positioned by Alan Oliver. Whitehead's fences, st positioned by Alan Olive David Nicholson, the National Hunt trainer, came north to judge the utiddle and heavyweight hunters which occupied the main ring all morning, alternately with John Fowler from co. Meath, a three-day event rider.

Master of the Cambridgeshire Harriers, with Blake's Reach, another Irish horse by Blue Cliff, who is being brought on slowly and given time to grow to his great frame. Vincent Toulson's Paris, top middleweight at the Royal, dropped back to third place here below these two young borses.

Toulson won the heavyweight or Toulson won the heavyweight on Mastermind, but this five-year-old did not figure in the championship. Now each judge had to ride the other's winners, and they used this beautiful and spacious ring to test their galloping ability to the full. It was clearly a close verdict, and at one time it seemed be summoned to arbitrate, but in the end a compromise was reached and Bunowen gained the championship from Crown Court. Two of the progeny of the Queen's Cleveland Bay stallion Maigrave Cream finished champion and reserve in the breed classes and are eligible for the Lloyds Bank Wembley qualifier today, which the Queen will watch. Mulgrave Supreme has done a good deal to establish the high reputation of the breed since he came to stand at Max Abram's stud near York at the suggestion of the Crown Equexy, Colonel Sir John Miller. His progeny will be prominent in the main ring display of some 36 pure-bred and half-bred Clevelands which the Queen will be shown on her official visit. Results: John Fowler from Co. Meath, a three-day event rider of repute. He put Mrs Nigel Pease to head the novice lightwelents with Miss Mouse, a six-year-old black mare by Barbin, and reinforced the opinion of Thady Ryan at last week's Royal in selecting David Tatlow with Bunowen, an Irish horse by Seven Bells, to lead the open lightweight. Finally he gave last year's led champion at Dublin, Hi-Jacker, now owned by Mr Hunnable, the laurels among the four-year-olds.

Nicholson awarded the novice heavyweight class to David Tatlow on Mr Appleyard's bay four-year-old Danganelly, bought last year in Dublin and sold recently to the Netherlands. This was at the expense of Mrs Hugh Gingell, and Mrs A. Buxton's Crown Court.

is postponed

Madrid, July 12.—A European heavyweight title match between the champion, Lucien Rodriguez, of France, and Alfredo Evangelista, of Spain, scheduled here on Friday has been postponed, the Spaniard's manager said today.

José Maria Martin said he did not know the reason for the postponement but he hoped the delay would not last more than a week.

"In any case Alfredo will continue training", he suid.

The promoter, José Luis Martin Berrocal, was expected to fly to theye training", he said.

The promoter, José Luis Martin Berrocal, was expected to fly to Paris later today to discuss a new date with Rodriguez.

Another Frenchman, Jean-Baptiste Piedvache, will meet Primo Bandini, of Italy, for the European light-weiterweight title, vacated by Britain's Dave Green, on August 10 at Rimini. Green vacated the title to box Carlos Palomino, of Mexico, for the World Boxing Council's weiterweight championship. Piedvache lost to Green for the light-weiter title in London last December.

In San Juan, Wilfredo Gomez, of Puerto Rico, retained his share of the WBC's super-bantamweight title yesterday by knocking out Raul Tirado, of Mexico, after 2min S9sec of the fifth round.

The end came when Gomez hit the Mexican in the stomach with it have right.

The Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and Central Atlanta Progress held a joint news conference on Monday to announce that the city will not bid for the Games. The mayor, Maynard Jackson, said last week he doubted if the city would afford the Games. Robert Strickland, chairman of CAP, said if the city had been "publicly committed to the 1984 Games, its airport bonds would have been more difficult to sell, due to the financial risk faced by the city with the Olympic Games."

Aslanta recently sold $305m in bonds for expansion of Hartsfield International Airport. Strickland said officials felt there "are nove urgent human needs, including public employees" wages ", which have priority.—UPI.

Grunwick fail to get Acas report declared void ordered to pay the costs of Acas and Apex.

In his Lordship's judgment Grunwick had not established that no reasonable body properly instructed could have reached the conclusion reached by Acas or that it had taken irrelevant factors into account or failed to take relevant matters into account. Acas was emitted to have regard to the views of former employees who were dismissed while on strike; and the report was not nullified by Acas's failure to obtain the onicion of the employees still at work.

Mr Mervyn Heald, QC, Mr Stuart McKingon and Mr George Newman for Grunwick; Mr Demis Henry, QC, Mr Peter Scott and Mr Peter Goldsmith for Acas; Mr J. Hampden Inskip, QC, and Mr Jeffrey Burke for Apex.

HIS LORDSHIP said that sections 11 to 16 of the Employment

His Lordship granted an interlocutory injunction restraining the holding of Sunday markets on land at the Loop, Manston, Kent, ruling that a field was not a shop. The injunction had been sought by Thanet District Council against Ninedrive Ltd, Pardal Trading Co, Mr Alan Nigel Dalton, and the owners of the land, Mr A. M. Robertson, Mrs H. M. Robertson, Mr S. A. Robertson. The injunction was suspended so as to permit the holding of one more market on Sunday (July 10).

nolds for the defendants.

HIS LORDSHIP said that apart from certain trades, set out in Schedule 5 to the Shops Act, 1950, which might lawfully be carried on on the Sabbath day, the Act provided that all shops must be closed on Sunday. The Act also contained special provisions relating to persons of Jewish and, indeed, other faiths to whom the Christian Sabbath was not a day of rest. The idea behind those provisions was that a devout Jew, prevented from opening ins shop on a Saturday by the teness of his faith should not be forced to close two days a week, while his Christian neighbour was forced to close only on one day.

From that simple idea for hold-only on one day.

From that simple idea for holding the balance of statutory prohibitions, there had spring np attempts by persons of the Jewish faith to exploit such provisions and the planding law contained in the General Development Order, 1977, for an entirely allen purpose—holding Sunday markets in suitable localides whereat the traders were not, or were mainly not, Jews. If on a true construction of the Act they were entitled to do so, so be it; but the question was whether they were so entitled.

On May 30 Thanet District

entitled.

On May 30 Trianet District Council, the local planning authority, had made a direction under Article 4 (3) (b) of the General Development Order, 1977, affecting Manston atrifield which included land known as the Loop, restricting the uses to which it could be put. On April 26 Nine-drive Ltd, of which Mr Dalton was a director, had applied, before there had been any occupation or carrying on of business by it on the Loop, for registration of the land under section 53

Chancery Division

The local authority had accordingly instituted the present proceedings, and were claiming an interlocutory injunction restrain-ing Nicedrive and the other defendants, which included Pardal derendants, which included Pardai Trading Co, a name used by various companies in which Mr Dalton was interested, and four persons named Robertson, who were the owners of the ske, from used the land in question as a retail market on Sundays.

Mr Bernstein submitted that the premises, ie, the land at the Loop was a shop and not a place. While section 53 talked of "a shop", it was section 53 that extended the provisions of section 53 to "any place where any retail trade or business is carried on as if that place were a shop, and as if in relation to any such place the person by whom the retail trade or business is carried on were the occupier of a shop". Mr Bernstein said that the land was a shop and pointed to the definition in section 74 (1), contending that it was wide enough to include a field, and that nothing prevented a shop from including parts where, as was common in departmental stores, others could trade, whether or not they were of the Jewish faith.

Jewish faith.

His Lordship was not so persuaded, and concluded that a field was a place and not a shop, a distinction between a shop and a place being rendered necessary by section 58. In Mahy v Warwick Corporation (1972) 2 QB 242) there had been a concession that the field was a shop, but his Lordship could not imagine that the Lord Chief Justice would have accepted that unless he had thought it correct.

Where, as here, one found 40 stalls set up, carrying on varied trades under various proprietors, then each stall was a shop for the purposes of section 53; there was nothing which enabled the sort of blanket registration on which Ninedrive relied to take place at all.

anour your pay ann constants of employment?

2 Do you want Apex to negotiate with your employers about your pay and conditions of employment?

The answers were almost unanimous in favour of Apex. There were, however, a number of workers at the factory who had not been on strike. It was the sames and addresses of those workers for which Acas had been pressing. Paragraph 22 of Acar's report stated: "We had no information as to the names and addresses, nor any other suitable means of access to the remaining workers will working in the company so that their opinion could not be exceptibled?"

questions to each member of the group, to be answered secretly, and then studying the results. The main object of the reference to "formal ballot" in the content of the section was to exclude recording opinion by a mass meering or show of hands.

The inquiry conducted by Acas was a formal ballot, but the only practical consequence was that it brought in the obligation of section 14(2) to promote equal right and opportunity of voting and to preserve secrety.

normally works (a) under a couract of employment. The expression "worker" thus clearly extended to someone not for the time being in employment and his Lordship had no doubt that the men and women in question were workers to whom the issue related in view of their desire to return to work with Groswick. Acas was, therefore, in order in taking account of the opinion of that group of workers, though the weight given to that opinion was for Acas to assess.

shop were let into occupation there would be a change of occupation, bringing section $3(8) into operation; and the Interpretation Act, 1889, should be applied to section $3(1), under which a person of the Jewish faith could apply to the local authority to have his shop registered so as to permit trading on Sunday until two o'clock in the afternoos, so that it read in the plural "the occupiers of any shop who are persons of the Jewish faith shall be entitled ...", etc.

As Mr Schlemann pointed out, the licence under which Ninedrive was occupying the land only gave a right to use it on Sundays between certain hours, and it was clear that, for sections 53 to 58, occupation was not intended to mean a single day's occupation. Mr Berustela was correct in saving that, subject to registration, Ninedrive, and such traders as were carrying on exempt trades under Schedule 1, and others who had themselves registered a shop under section 53 could trade on the site; but here no one other than Ninedrives are the section for the section for the site;

applications.

Even if the defendants were to succeed in their application pending before the Divisional Court and expected on July 20, for an order of mandamus ordering registration to be effected, it could only frank Ninedrive's own trading and not that of anyone else. Ninedrive did in fact supply refreshments for persons visiting the market.

In the result it agreement that for persons visiting the market.

In the result it appeared that Ninedrive was clearly in breach, both of the planting law and the Shops Act. After referring to Stafford Borough Council v Elkenford Ltd. ([1977] I WLR 324) his Lordship said that the injunction sought must be greated, but with an exception in the case of all Schedule 5 trading carried on by Ninedrive itself. In the first instance such exception should extend until the determination by the Divisional Court. If those proceedings concluded in favour of Ninedrive, then, on belance, the exception should become permanent; but if those proceedings went uganst Ninedrive and no mandamus were issued, then the exception vould lapse.

Choosing the Labour Party leader: why MPs should think again

Mr James Callaghan", The unsatisfactory amalgam Times reported on April 6, first and second conceptions. 1976, "was acclaimed the new The leader of the PLP is leader of the Labour Party at widely regarded (and no doubt Westminster yesterday." It regards himself) as "Leader of Westminster yesterday." It regards himself) as "Leader of was an ambiguous form of the Labour Party"; but at the words, and therefore just same time, we also have in right. For the fact is that the shape of the executive while the party constitution incommittee—another organ in cludes a reference to the "Leader of the Parliamentary Labour Party"—who, of the authority of the parliamen-Party "--who, of is elected exclusively by Labour MPs—nowhere does it mention anyone called the "Leader of the Labour Party". Strictly speaking, there is no such office and no such person. And this, presumably, is why the working party set up by the national executive committee after last year's party conference was asked not only "to consider appropriate means of widening the electorate involved in the choice of the Leader" but was also instructed to "define the office of Leader of the Labour

As regards the method of As regards the method of election, the working party has now spelt out the options: no change from the present arrangements; election of the party leader by annual conference; and election by an electoral college, consisting of Labour MPs, parliamentary candidates, and representatives of the constituency parties. trade unions and other affiliated bodies. What, if anything, it has done about defining the office of party leader not so clear. This is a pity, for although the Labour Party has never in the past allowed its thinking to be dominated by the requirements of logic, there is at least something to be said for establishing what more; or, there is a parliamen-tary leader who is also acknowledged outside parliament as the de facto leader of the party as a whole; or, we have a fully-fledged "Leader of the Labour Party" as a whole, for mally recognized as such inside and outside Parliament

tary leader, and which regards itself (and is widely regarded) as an alternative and some times competing locus of eadership for the party. If the Labour Party were now starting from scratch, would it—I wonder—actually choose to build into the organization an institutional basis for its persistent schismatic tendencies?
This leaves the third possible lity. And personally I doubt whether there would be much resistance to the idea of establishing a de jure "Leader of the Labour Party" were it not for the inevitable, and (to some) unpalatable, next step in the argument which is this: if we are to have a recognized Leader, capable of speaking authoritatively for the party as a whole, then clearly he or she will have to be chosen by the party as a whole, and not just by those members of the party who have been elected to the House of Commons.

Which brings us to Labour MPs, most of whomnot surprisingly—are opposed to any change in the existing arrangements, ostensibly on the following grounds: (i) The PLP, they say, consists of people selected as candidates by their general management be said for establishing what exactly is up for election before deciding who shall be entitled to vote.

There are three possible conceptions of the status of party leader. The Labour Party operates with a parliamentary leader, who is that and nothing more; or, there is a parliamentary leader who is also acknowleader who is also acknowleader. Labour supporters in the constilocal authorities, where leaders are elected exclusively by councillors; (iv) Any change in the system, they maintain, could have profound constitu-tional implications in that the leader of the parliamentary party who becomes Prime and outside Parliament.

In practice, what we now Minister must command the have in the Labour Party is an support of the parliamentary party in the House of Commons; it is essential therefore to avoid any possibility of conflict; and (v) members of the PLP, they argue, are in the best position to know the area. Meeting the 1976 contest suggests (HM) best position to know the qua-lities and character of the candidates for the leadership. These arguments really do take a great deal of swallow-ing. Consider, for a start, the claim that the PLP is a democratic electoral body". What we are asked to accept, apparently, is that—once elected—then for the next 15 or 20 years, a Labour MP to represent the views of his constituency party whenever a new leader has to be chosen. True, for what it is worth, there is such a thing as " cousultation * Drucker, "Leadership Selec-tion in the Labour Party", in Parliamentary Affairs of Autumn, 1976) regarded con-sultation as "just window dressing". One can well sultation as dressing ". O believe it. In any case, the obvious question what about all the party members and supporters happen to live in constituencies not represented by Labour

Then there is the comparison between Labour MPs and local councillors, a genuine barrel scraper this. The anal-ogy is quite irrelevant for the simple reason that the leader of the Labour group on a local party leader? Is the rest of eise. No one suggests that he is say in picking the helmsman? in some sense the leader of a And so we come to the nub constituency party outside the of the controversy. It is no council chamber. And that is secret that what chiefly why, in his case, there is no agitates many of those in-reason to allow anyone but volved in this debate is not so councillors to take part in the much party democracy as the election. Not much better is the appeal to speed and efficiency. It is not unknown for of the probable contenders for deputies to act as temperary the leadership. The left leaders until a permanent re-believes that a wider electorate leaders until a permanent relacement is chosen. And even processes and even would rayour their candidate; if there were to be some sac; and the right and centre evirtice of efficiency, that is dently agree.

Surely something which MPs of all people—ought to accept with equanimity if, as a result, we get a more democratic promight indeed fare better than what Labour MPs have in mind, when they task about profound constitutional implications? and hant darkly about the "possibility of conflict", I do not know. If the Labour Party does adopt a new procedure for choosing its leader, then provision for the newstyle leader, and for the method of election, will presumably have to be made in the form of an amendment to the party constitution. Since no one can be a member of the Labour Party, let alone a parliamentary candidate, unless the undertakes to observe that constitution, one wonders what exactly the difficulties are that the PLP foresees. Surely it is not being suggested that the party leader, chosen by the prescribed constitutional procedure, would not be able to rely

And lastly, there is the special knowledge of the character and qualities of the candidates for the leader. the candidates for the leader-ship supposedly possessed by Labour MPs. There may be something in this. But upper-most in the minds of most MPs, surely, is the position of the contenders on the ideo-logical spectrum. They wore for their preferred candidate pri-marily because they believe that, under his leadership, there would be more chance of the party moving in the prethe party moving in the pre-ferred direction. There is nothing wiping with that. But why should the ideological pre-ferences of Labour MPs alone.

college, a left-wing candidate might indeed fare better than at present. Whether he would ever do well enough to get elected must be very much open to doubt. For one thing, the prospect of a frightened electorate and a lost election is not one that would appeal to the trade unions, and they are not given to running losers if they can avoid it. And for another, if the constituency parties actually had somethi of importance to decide, we might even see a certain amount of competitive recruiting; and if the left really is as ary Labour voter as we are told in a competition of this kind it could scarcely hope to come off-best.

apparently not prepared to take a chance. And as things take a chance. And as things now stand, our MPs seem to be on a collision course with much of the party outside Westminster. They should think again. In an electoral college which would surely provide a much fairer expression of party collision than consick of party opinion than con-ference—Labour MPs would still play as impostant part in electing the leader, as they should. It is their claim to exclusive rights that many of us in the party find objection-able. A voice, however small leader should not be too much

Anxiety grows in the Kremlin over Mr Carter's stand on human rights

A new account of Soviet foreign policy has been published in the Washington Post. It is by Mr Boris Rabbot, a Soviet Jewish emigrant, who claims to have been near the centres of power in Moscow for the past decade, and whose account of the fears and hopes of his former colleagues differs in many respects from the usual analyses of Western Kremin-

The newspaper expresses some reservations about Mr Rabbot; but Robert Kaiser, the Washington Post's distinguished former Moscow correspondent, inclined to take him is incli .seriously.

Mr Rabbot says that President Carter has aroused intense anxiety among Soviet leaders because of his statements on human rights and because they remain unsure about his motives. According to Mr. Rabbot, the Russians saw détente as a matter of limiting the arms race while increasing scientific, cultural and commercial exchanges without interfering with Soviet domestic policies.

From the start, however, they had to face the possibility that increased exchanges with the West would lead to the penetra-West would lead to the beneva-tion into Soviet society of Western ideas of democracy and human rights. This was precisely what Soviet liberals wanted, of course; but Mr Rabbot claims that many others. who are not at all liberal accept that change is an inexit-table consequence of detente.

He mentions Greorgi Arbatov whom he describes as the leading Soviet theorist on detents, as criticizing liberalizirg rendencies but believing that detents will inevitably result in strong new western influences reaching Russia and eventually bringing freedom too. Mr Rabbot writes: Arbatov approved of western influences .-that - would . force. changes in the Soviet Union but, like many others, he feared that unilateral reforms from within could result in unconwrenching changes."

Mr Rabbot discusses the Soviet view of American détente policy, saying that there are three schools of thought. The first believes that the Americans want to set the Russians and Chinese against one another, even to the point of war; the second that they want to liberalize, and thus destroy, Soviet society; and the third that they merely want to limit the arms race.

More than one of these theories can be held simultaneously and (although Mr Rabbot cannot comment at first. hand on Soviet reactions to Mr Carter's policies) it is clearly possible that the second version has been much reinforced in recent months.

Every vote a winner, except for the odd men out

I am dismayed and astonished that. at the lack of any comment (at simple calculation will show, at least I have seen none) on the precisely one candidate for each least I have seen none) on the least I have seen none) on the recent elections in Mongolia. If the press of the so-called free when we look beyond them to the head of the so-called free when we look beyond them to world so ignominiously fails in the human reality that we begin its duty to bring to its readers attention so important an expression of Mongolian public opinion, I am not surprised at the growing tide of criticism of that press which is now flowing even in the so-called free world itself, let alone in the genuinely free world represented by the People's Republic of Mongolia. Be that as it may, I must now do what little I can to repair

The elections of which I speak took place throughout Mongolia on June 19 (June 19 was the birthday of Edgar Degas, but I do not suppose that the elections were held on that date as a mark of esteem for him. You never know, though; they may be very into Degas in Mongolia). The voters were choosing the members of the People's Great Hural which seems to be what is known elsewhere as a parliament, so you may well suppose that the elections were considered vital in those parts, and the contest keenly fought.

I have before me the report of the Central Electoral Com-mission, which is apparently the body charged with supervising Mongolian elections, and from this report I learn first that there are 354 constituencies in Mongolia, and next that by the most astonishing and heart-warming coincidence there were exactly 354 candidates, and neither more nor fewer than to understand Mongolian politics. What a wealth of meaning, for instance, there is in such a statement as this:

After reviewing the election results, the Central Electoral Commission has declared that the elections to the Mon-golian People's Republic People's Great Hural were held in complete accordance with the requirements of the Mongolian People's Republic Constitution and its provisions on elections.

Such scrupulous rectitude in the conduct of elections puts to shame those countries else-where which have lower standards; in Mongolia, at any rate, the elections are held in complete (my italics) accordance with the provisions of the constitution. Nor is that the only respect in which Mongolia shows the way; the voters on cuous lack of political apathy, and on the contrary displayed a remarkable keenness, in selecting those who were to govern them. There are (again, I quote from the report of the Central Electoral Commission) 694,855 voters on the register in Mongolia, and no fewer than 99.99 per cent took part in the election, a result which speaks for itself—though the Central Commission to be on Electoral Commission, to be on the safe side, speaks for it, describing it as "an objective expression of socialist demo-

Who the others voted for is not recorded by the Central Electoral Commission, and it is difficult to guess. Perhaps Mongolian elections permit, as do some American ones, a "write-in" vote, though if so the Central Electoral Commission makes no mention of the iden-

The hospital theatre of the absurd

Let me tell you a story about the good doctors and the wicked tax men. It has hardly begun, and yet it looks as if the word "finis" has been written. Dr Michael Rosen is an anaesthetist at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff. Last June, he won a concession from the local tax office. It said it would waive tax on his sterilization fees—about £10.75 an operation—and on the fees of his fellow surgeons (about £22). The doctors put all their fees into a special fund to buy much-needed hospital equipment. Through normal channels, the equipment would have taken years to obtain, What motivated the doctors was their belief that they should cession was a mistake. Even if the doctors did not keep their fees, they were told, they were still theirs by right and were, therefore, taxable. Now the equipment-buying schemes—a most commendable humanitarian gesture—are in the balance. Is there a deus ex machina in the house?

process involving several more would have been confirmed if might lead to a declaration by the Central Arbitration Committee, This could, in effect, write a guarantee of a right to union then he for individual employees to take civil action to enforce their rights. If they were sacked for joining a union, that would be unfair dismissal and compensation would have to be paid. Mr Ward has promised to abide by the findings of the courts, although it is not clear at which point in all this he would regard legal processes as having been completed. The House of Lords's finding will be conclusive, of course, as to whether Acas acted properly or not.

This is an inconclusive pros-pect of events. It is the result of the 1974 Government's determination to exclude the threat of criminal sanctions as far as possible from industrial conflict. Great harm had been done to industrial relations in general by a series of cases in which the action of the law had been to inflame grievances, not settle them. A great edifice of law was erected to prevent this. Now, ironically, it has brought to prominence a case as disruptive as any of the earlier ones, and as bizarrely disproportionate in the contrast between the immediare and the consequential issues that it raises. All this is acutely frustrating to many trade unionists, some of whom now begin to regret the absence of sterner legal sanctions stages of attempted conciliation Lord Widgery had found that a refusal by Grunwick to cooperate in Acas's "attitude survey" was sufficient to stymic the whole prescribed procedure. That representation into the firm's would certainly have been a contract of employment. It would colourable reading of the Act, and it was widely expected that it would prevail. Charged with ascertaining the opinions of "all parties who it considers will be affected" in a recognition dispute, and with ensuring that all workers have "an equal right and a fair opportunity" of voting in a ballot, Acas indisputably did a lamentable job. It tested only that minority of those affected who were certain to favour recognition and made its recommendation on the strength of that. It had sought to do better, but been prevented, Lord Widgery finds, however, that this did not disqualify its decision.

Nevertheless it is likely that most of the employees still working at Grunwick's are in fact opposed to recognition. The antics that they have wimessed outside the gate could hardly have given them a worse impression of the nature of the movement. If so, it is still open to Mr Ward to allow their opinion to be tested. Yesterday's judgment is no vindication of a union right to thrust the benefits of membership on a body of workers who do not want them. Acas has no power to enforce any such thing, in any case. The ruling reaffirms that negotiation, not con-frontation, is the most fruitful approach to industrial disputes.

people in this country are religious, they hold certain beliefs sacred and elevate certain symbols or individuals to the divine. Vilifying those beliefs to the extent of outrage can be more than a matter between the blasphemer and the insulted. It amounts to an attack on the fun-damental decencies and mutual stability of a community. Allowexists between different groups, particularly, perhaps, where racial and religious divisions go together. Even where racial differences do not exist, Northern Ireland is an example of the real danger that can spring from treating what others hold sacred with contempt—one of the reasons one has for permanently distrusting Mr Paisley. The common law, however, confines the offence of blasphemy to attacks on the Christian religion. Judge King-Hamilton seems to have been wrong in stating that the ambit of the offence was wide enough to encompass similar offensive aspersions on other religious. There is authority to the effect that it is not blasphemy to vilify the Jewish or any other non-Christian religion.

It may not have mattered too much until recently that the offence was so narrowly defined. . Today, however, substantial minorities of British citizens follow religions other than Christianity, and, indeed, a high proportion of them are devout followers, who would perhaps take even greater exception to decogatorily offensive remarks about their gods than would most Christians to similar language about Christ. If blasphemy is to remain a crime, adherents of the main non-Christian religions should also be entitled to have the benefit of its protection. Where to draw the line could cause difficulties, damental decencies and mutual Muslims, Hindus, Sikhs, respect on which society Buddhists and Jews would operates, and could damage the clearly need to be placed on the same footing as Christians. But ing total freedom to insult the what of the innumerable minor religious beliefs of others can sects and quasi-religions which also have a profoundly adverse have a presence in Britain? The effect on the harmony that protection should be confined to major religions and not be exi ded to the scientologists or Mr Moon. There is a danger that the success (subject to appeal) of the Gay News prosecution will encourage other individuals and organizations to start similar, perhaps less reasonably founded, private prosecutions. There is a temptation to urge that a prosecution should be able to be brought only with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions or Attorney-General. But: blasphemy is an offence which depends for its existence on the public's reaction to certain language, and it is right that members of the public should continue to be able to play a part in its prosecution. The Crown should not normally take over such prosecutions, however, as it did in the Gay News case. It would then be left to juries to determine the validity of the cases before them, and, by their verdicts, to throw out those which are unmeritorious. The costs sanction should be enough to dissuade all but the most genuine prosecutions.

Tory ideals

From Mr Roger King

Sir, Your leader today (July 5) and Mrs Thatcher are right—as far as you both go. But Mrs Thatcher's list of the manifestations of Victorian social concern contains no reference to agriculture ... an omission which is all to common amongst our urban orientated leaders.
In 1870 the cause of agriculture in Britain had sunk so low that the then Board of Agriculture were con-sidering abandoning it altogether. Since then it has revived somewhat, but amidst two confusions of thought. First, that yield per man is more important than yield per acre and second, that agriculture can be compared with industry an equation which is incorrect and dangerous, since one depends on the rhythm of nature, and the other

The Victorians believed they had something to fight for . . we do not. But we could have if agriculture and silviculture were given their right-ful place in our priorities . . . at the top. Two reforms would make a beginning, and they already apply in Denmark. First, a maximum limit to be placed on the size of farms (probably smaller than we might expect) and second, no farm to be owned by anyone who does not live upon it. Perhaps then we might see an explosion of people deciding their own lives accompanied by regeneration in the countryside. could fight for that. Yours faithfully,

Keeping theatres alive

From Sir Donald Albery

S.r. With reference to your report of the recent Equity meeting in your issue of July 6 and your subse-quent leading article commenting on the problems of the larger provin-cial theatres, July 7, may 1 make the following comments: These theatres, not including the value of their sites, would cost three million or more pounds each to replace, and I do not believe that there is any disadvantage in their size if the authorities and others would be realistic as to the nature of the problem which is that at existing prices of admission insufficient revenue can be generated to ensure a regular supply of the kind of show that will tempt people away from their television sets. In my view action should be taken forthwith on the following lines:

Government immediately relieve the live per-forming arts of VAT on admission charges. It is completely iniquitous to ensure that Shakespeare, Shaw and Stoppard and Beethoven, Mozart and Britten should be taxed whilst multi-million industry of soft and hard porn is let go scot free whilst in other countries it is taxed at 331

2. All theatres housing the live performing arts should have the same raping concession, ie, 50 per cent rebate, as in the case of the subsidized theatre.

3. The top price seats both in the subsidized sector and in the commercial sector in the provinces should be substantially raised in line with inflation. Everything else in a provincial city costs approximately the same as in Lordon mately the same as in London whether it is a meal in a restaurant, a taxi cab ride, food or clothing, and the present situation is patently quite ludicrous as no theatre goer of our great provincial cities is going to quibble about a realistic admission charge if we offer him a top quality show, but it is extremely doubtful if he will leave his home at any price if the quality of the attraction is only indifferent or unexciting. This is not an untried formula as approximately 15 years ago when the American touring theatres were in the same predica-ment, they started a policy of sending our top star quality enter-tainments at approximately New York prices with the result that national tours became virtually as profitable, and more so in many cases, as a New York run, and star artistes who were previously reluctant to tour became only too pleased to do so.

4. Local authorities should be encouraged to make special grants for modernization and improvement schemes. 5. It should be borne in mind that these large privately owned theatres are not only used by commercial managements, but also by the larger subsidized companies for opera, ballet and dramatic presentations, and it would be far more expensive to the Exchequer to provide suitable alternative venues in the cities concerned than for the Covernment and the authorities to give the minimum help suggested

6. The Government should continue to give generous subsidies to the subsidized sector whether London based companies, touring companies or repertory companies, sub-ject to the condition that the price of admission to the more expensive seats should be adjusted individually and from time to time in line with inflation. This is essential if co-operation between the subsidized sector and the independent sector is to continue to the advantage of the whole nation. The Arts Council the whole nation. The Arts Council has already for some time begun to take a helpful artitude towards the interests of the theatre as a whole. This should be encouraged still further so that the Arts Council will be equally pleased and proud to have helped in whatever way it can to improve and nurture the standard the line performing arts. dards of the live performing arts whether it is in the subsidized sec-tor or otherwise. I know from my personal experience that on many matters the commercial theatre has already received substantial moral support from the Arts Council, and I sincerely hope that the prosperity of the industry generally and the welfare of the artistes and others who work in it will be further enhanced in the future by even greater interest being taken by the Arts Council and in particular that they will use all their efforts to see that a fair balance is maintained between

Miners in Bolivia From the President of the National Union of Mineworkers and others: Sir, In reply to the Bolivian Ambas-sador's letter of July 4, I would like to clarify a number of points. Fol-lowing the brutal suppression of the Bolivian tinminers' strike last year and the imprisonment and exile to Chile of their major leaders, the Bolivian miners' union (FSTMB) and the Bolivian TUC invited the British National Union of Mineworkers to send a delegation to Bolivia to visit the mining areas. meet the miners and appraise itself of their problems. The NUM Executive therefore sent a delegation to Bolivia and Chile in April this year. The earlier scheduled visit Chilean Government refused permission for the delegation to enter the country.

The Bolivian Ambassador, whilst avoiding the substantive iss human rights and trade union free-dom which motivated our visit, attacks the NUM for failing to make the delegation's visit public from the outset.

The reasons for this were straightforward. First the Bolivian miners had indicated to the NUM that there would be grave danger of re-prisals from the authorities should the miners speak openly to us. Secondly, we had a number of reasons to believe that the delegation would not have been allowed to operate freely.

Marcel Pepin from the CMT in Brussels on a similar mission was expelled from the country in late 1976. In 1975 Father Eric de Wasseije, a Belgian missionary who had been working with the Justice and Peace Commission in Bolivia, was expelled for publishing details of human rights violations. Even the respected former President of Bolivia, Luis Adolfo Siles, was prevented by the military from talking to the miners on the spot as he wished and forced to return to the capital city.

The delegation did have extensive contacts with the mineworkers' leaders, who had been democrati-

Corocoro in 1976. The delegation did not have discussions with the government appointed Trade Union National Mining Committee (TUNMC), who were not democratically elected, and are not recognized by the miners themselves.

The NUM was aware of the extraordinacy $19 million sent that extraordinary £19 million grant that the British Government was con-templating making available to the Bolivian Government. All the miners and the other Bolivian trade unionists with whom our delegation spoke were adament that the British Government should not make the aid aveilable until all in miners were released, all exiled miners allowed to return home un-conditionally, until the army were withdrawn from the mines, and until free trade union activities were permitted in the mines once more. . The NUM Executive has endorsed this stand as also has the British

The Cambridge conspiracy From Dr P. H. Beves

Sir, I had in fact drafted a letter of acknowledgement of your apology (June 29)—half-hearted thanks for a half-hearted apology when I was blown out of the water by Mr Ryland's fury (July 1). Mr Hennessy's apology (June 30) seemed much more heartfelt. "Handsome" is not the word I would apply to the leader.

Two good things have come out of this evil-that-should-never-havebeen. One is the touching way in which umpteen people have sprung up to speak for the long dead Donald, both in private and in public; the other is the manner in which you have doggedly persisted in publishing letters reviling your conduct. This penance adds a good deal to your apology. Where else in the world could such a thing be Much of your readership

TUC and other sectors of the labour movement. We have therefore demanded that these eminently reasonable conditions be attached to the £19 million grant to Bolivia. It is surely the very least that we can expect from a British Labour Gov-

We feel that our report accurately reflects the views of Bolivian miners and therefore believe there is no justification for another visit from the NUM at this moment. However, perhaps the Bolivian Ambassador would extend his invitation to a delegation from Amnesty International which, as an international rather than a purely British organization, would I know welcome the opportunity to report on the question of human rights in Bolivia.

From Mr Peter Oppenheimer Sir, While appreciating Joe Haines's humour (July 8), I fear that he does his own profession no credit by his failure to recognize the difference between a mistake and a piece of professional misconduct. Perhaps his membership of the Royal Commission on Legal Services will give him an opportunity to clarify his mind on this point over the next year or two. Yours faithfully.

PETER OPPENHEIMER Christ Church,

From Mr Stephen Corrin

Sir, If ever you decide to inaugurate an annual prize for the most deflationary letter of the year, Mr Joe Haines's withering retort to Messrs Howard and Oppenheimer (Letters, July 8) should certainly qualify for the first award.

Think about it, Sir. Yours sincerely.

Mink as threat to bird life

هلآا مسة بلكمط

From Dr W. R. P. Bourne

Sir, Mink which have escaped from fur farms are now one of the com-monest predatory animals in Britain, and over 40 are said to have been caught in one trap during one win-ter at one of our major nature reserves. They have caused even more trouble elsewhere, for example in Iceland, where they are preying on the breeding wildfowl. In the circumstances it is alarming that the Orkney Islands Council have recently given outline planning permission for the establishment of a mink farm on the island of Westray, which holds the largest seabird colony in the British Isles after St Kilda, including over a quarter of a million birds of 19 species, some of which are present throughout the year. The bird cliffs have been declared a grade I Site of Special Scientific Interest by the Nature Conservancy Council, and those at Noup Head were recently acquired by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds as a nature reserve. Both organizations joined Mr W. Groundwater, author of The Birds and Mannals. of Orkney, in opposing the applica-tion. The local Development Officer. I. Coghill, added the alarming news that there are already two mink farms in Shetland which have so far caused no trouble; the chairman commented that this would be a new industry for the islands (presumably supplying additional clothing following the discovery of North Sea oil), pointed out that there were no local objections, and the proposal was accepted. There is ample experience to show that when such animals are intro-duced to a country they tend to escape and it is often impossible to get rid of them, as for example occurred when stoars were maliciously introduced into Shetland in the Middle Ages. Current legislation for the control of the introduction of potentially noxious animals into British and different parts of the Britain, and different parts of the British Isles, seems entirely inade-quate. Both this planning application and the whole situation which could arise surely deserve more scrutiny. Yours faithfully, W. R. P. BOURNE,

The Grunwick dispute

From Lord-Duncan Sandys, CH Sir, In the recent exchanges in Par-tiament on the Grunwick dispute, a distinction has rightly been made between "picketing" and "demon-

The right to demonstrate peacefully must be preserved. But does this imply that people have a right, day after day, to organize a mass demonstration in the same streets, in order to make the same point over and over again, thereby totally the safety of the local inhabitants for an indefinite period? In any amendments to the law, which may be made, this aspect of the problem should not be overlooked. Yours faithfully, DUNCAN SANDYS, House of Lords.

From Mr John Derrick Sir, The Home Secretary told the House of Commons today (July 11) that the number of policemen in-jured in today's renewed violence at Grunwick was "unacceptable". What an extraordinary thing to say. It implies that there is an acceptable level of police injury. If Mr Rees is to be an "acceptable" Home Secretary, he will have to be a little more courageous on these occasions.

House of Lords reform

From Lady Wooton of Abinger, CH Sir, Your correspondent David Wood (July 4) has written a somewhat critical article on the so-called Labour Peers' proposals for House of Lords reform.

It should, I think, be made clear that these proposals by no means carry the unanimous assent of the Labour Peers. They are the majority recommendations of the Cham-pion Committee (a minority, myself included, dissenting), and were fully debated at two meetings of the Peers themselves. Unfortunately no vote was taken at either of these meetings for or against the proposals, so it is impossible to say what support they have.

This does not of course mean that the opponents of the Champion plan do not want reform. Some of us advocare reforms of a different character, and some are prepared in your correspondent's words on the black cap and sentence ourselves to death", in the conviction that a reformed unicameral system will prove to be the only practicable solution of the present impasse.

Yours etc. WOOTTON OF ABINGER. House of Lords. July 6.

The 77 Club

From Mr Robert Lord

Sir, The 7-7-77 index, the subject of the letters of Mr Petgrave-Johnson (July 7) and Mr D. R. Forrester (July 9), extends to international sport. The cricket test between England and Australia commenced at Old Trafford on 7-7-77, which was the 77th day of the Australians' nour. In the 77th over, K. D. Walters took his score to 77, his partner at the wicket being R. W. Marsh, barting at No 7.

AIR VICE-MARSHAL A. F. LANG Group Captain Adrian Cocks

There is, I think, one, if not the most important point in Air Vice Marshal Lang's career which has not been mentioned in your obitiery notice, namely his foresight and determination to see a radar training school established somewhere outside Early in 1941 we had one two such schools in this country, both of only modest size both liable to bombing and a time when reder was relevant.

Within 10 weeks, the ingression of tradar equipmental from the United Kingdom be gan, the permanent staff of the school being a mixture of RAF and RCAF, and within 14 weeks training began.

It was again typical of Langs foresight that as soon as the radar equipment was installed at Clinfon, Ontario, he arranged in Washington for batches of personnel from all batches of personnel from all branches of the United States armed forces to be sent to Clin-ton (where I was the first Station Commander) for short radar courses, at a time when the USA had not yet entered: the war and had negligible; radar training facilities of their

Mr George Turnbull, the former British Leyland managing director who is being sought by the National Enterprise Board to help it in dealing with the state-controlled ing with the state-billy one car group, yesterday had pre-liminary discussions with Mr Leslie Murphy, the NEB's chairman-designate and present deputy chairman.

Saudis call for Opec price freeze in 1978 after December increase

From Roger Vielvoye Stockholm, July 17

Saudi Arabia wants a further 12-month freeze on oil prices throughout 1978 once the Organization of Petroleum Exincreased oil costs at the end of this year, Shaikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi oil minister, said here tonight.

But in line with the new atmosphere of unity that exists at the Open conference now that the six-month-long split over two-tier oil pricing has been healed, he added: "We will have to discuss this with out Opec colleagues."

Although oil prices are not on the agenda for the confer-ence, ministers have been under pressure to give their views on th outcome of the next price fixing meeting due to take place in Caracas, Venebuela, in December.

Already there is talk among ministers' advisers of a 10 per cent rise followed by the yearone freeze that the Saudis are seeking. It seems that the main battle in Caracas will be over the size of the January 1, 1978, price rise and not how long it

After the six months of mediation behind the scenes that ended the split over twotiered pricing, the ministers from the 13 member nations to demonstrate publicly their new-found unity.

Old adversaries over prices, robbed of their normal debating topic by the settlement of the pricing dispute, have reached a measure of agreement in measure short statements outside the conference that would never have been possible when the question of prices was at stake. Even when Shalkh Yamani raised his hopes for a further price freeze in 1978, one of his most persistent opponents on oil prices, Dr Jamschid Amouzegar, the Iranian dele-gate, said nothing to contradict. him.

Dr Amouzegar, a leading advocate of higher prices at previous meetings, said Opec had made up its mind to be united over prices, and nothing would shake him from this. Whether this artitude will continue when Opec gers down to discussions over prices in the months leading up to next December's price-fixing meet-ing, remains to be seen.

This unusual mood of harmony, and with prices removed from the discussions, has allowed the ministers to race the short official agenda with unusual speed. Conference sources said the where all the members not agree was on the differentials between the price of similar grades of oil in various member countries.

But in the interests of unity the whole topic would probably be sent back to Opec's economic experts for further consideration—a move that has proved popular in the past when the organization has failed to get to grips with this thorny problem.

Harris Queensway Retailers, is to be formed and Mr Harris who will become chairman; plans eventually to seek a Stock Exchange quotation for Queensway's future has been in the balance since the group's founder and major shareholders Mr Gerry Parish, resigned from the board last May. The depar ture of Mr Parish, who started the company in 1969, came after a series of boardroom disputes and a number of abortive attempts to arrange Stock Exchange flotation:

Boardroom rifts began to appear at Queensway after the appointment of a substantially new management team in 1975. Mr John Murphy arrived as managing director from Dunlop and Mr Bill Bailey joined him on the board from Unilever via the London Business School. A new finance director was also appointed, Mr Harvey, Walmsley, moving from Coates. Paton in 1975.

Expansion of the Queensway chain increased group turnover from £11m to £16.8m in 1975 and £19.3m last year. But over those years profits before tax fluctuated from £392,000 in 1974 to £1.2m in 1975 and back to £248,000 last year.

This uneven profits record did nothing to assist the group's efforts to obtain a public share quotation and late last year. County Bank and the Industrial & Commercial Finance Corpora tion moved in with additional finance and acquired share stakes of 15 per cent each.

It is understood that the approach from Harris came, after conversations between Queensway's managing director, Mr Murphy, and Mr Harris earlier this year. Although Mr Parish is to leave the company for his health farm in Norwich, the remainder of the Oueensway management is to stay and Mr. Murphy and Mr Bailey are to join the board of the group holding company.

Harris plans to continue trading from all of Queensway's. 26 "edge-of-town" warehouses and will maintain Queensway's separate head office in Norwich... There will be no redundancies among Queensway's 730 staff.

The Harris Carpets business dates from 1958 when it was founded by the then 16-year-old Philip Harris and his mother. The acquisition of the 20 Keith Royle shops from Combined English Stores in 1974 speeded group expansion. It now sells over £14m worth of discount carpets from 96 High Street Stores.

Harris's record of profits, growth has been markedly. more stable than Queensway's, pre-tax profits having risen steadily over the past four-years to £1.7m in 1976. The two businesses overlap in that, although furniture accounts for two thirds of Queensway's sales, discount carpets make up the balance. However, the Queensway side of the joint company will continue to sell carpets after the merger.

The purchase price is in line with Queensway's net assets. Queensway has been advised by stockbrokers Joseph Sebag, and Harris by County Bank, despite its 15 per cent shareholding in the target company.

"Secondary boycotts occur when a country will not do business with a British firm if such firm also does business with a third country—that is, Israel—which is proscribed by the first", Lord Byers said.

"The tertiary boycott is one where a British firm cannot do business with the first country, unless it agrees not to do business with any other British firm that does business with that proscribed country."

Lord Byers quoted the words of President Carter that the im-position of a boycott was a moral matter which went right to the heart of free trade-between nations. The Bill he was introducing, he said, sought to protect British individuals, companies and businesses.

which the most striking improvements have come from tourism (net earnings doubled to £1,628m between 1974 and 1976), the City (earnings doubled between 1971 and 1975 to £1.218m) and latterly from construction work (earnings doubled to £295m between 1973 and 1975).

The Committee is looking for the biggest invisibles increase this year to come from British construction work overseas. But more strong growth should also be achieved from tourism and civil aviation, with improvements coming too from insurance and banking. The outlook for shipping and the stock exchange is also picking up. For the rest, the point is worth making that gross private invisible earnings total more than half the value of Britain's visible exports.

timescales

Still basking in the warm glow of last year's profits recovery, most timber groups do not give the impression of an industry on the verge of another phase of retrenchment and rationalization.

Despite a grim outlook on the UK demand front and the prospect of significant price weakness this year, companies like International Timber are nevertheless quietly optimistic that consolidation moves made in the last cyclical trough will keep the momentum going in the current year.

But International, whose profits last year improved seven-fold to £6.5m, though this figure is still well short of the 1974 peak of £9.6m, does not deny that further rationalization within the industry could be of major importance to the long-term future of the Interestingly, that view is shared by Montague L. Meyer, which has a strategic 10.7 per cent stake in its rival International and which also reported yesterday, showing profits up by three-quarters to £14.3m representing a return to the 1974 peak. The two groups have had merger talks and International for its part admits that there is obvious logic in a merger though at the moment it values its independence.

Whether events will change that remains to be seen but there is no doubt that Meyer despite its current pre-occupation with continuing problems in its 1973 part-acquisition, the Hallam Group, likes to cast itself in the the Hallam Group, likes to cast itself in the role of a likely bid contender.

Its chairman, Mr John Meyer, says there is no doubt that further rationalization will be needed if the industry is to be in a position "to look after itself" in five years and that the main questions he in the mathematics of merger formulae.

Having reaped substantial stock profits from the demise of sterling last year timber groups have seen the economics of their trade turned on their head as a result of stable sterling and devaluations in supplying countries like Sweden, Finland and Portugal.

Fears of a further Swedish devaluation have already lead to rumours of a full-scale withdrawal of Russian sales in the face ofdeteriorating price levels and there has been some fairly heavy "selling-on" especially by smaller United Kingdom operators.

Hopes of a lift-off in housing after reflationary moves in the autumn provide further encouragement though the absence of any such boost may turn out to be the trigger for takeover talks throughout the

Meanwhile, the shares of International up 2p to 105p and Meyer up 4p to 68p yesterday offer yields of 9.1 per cent and 9.3 per cent respectively. While the p/e ratios are 5.4 against Meyer's 3.2. This seems an adequate reflection of the possibilities given that both groups are unlikely to make further significant progress this year.

Exchange rate policy 2

The case for holding down sterling

Michael Surrey, editor of the National Institute Economic Review, contributes the second of three

The question of what exchange rare policy should be in the medium-term is inextricably bound up with the question of how the potential benefits of North Sea oil should best be

For the next few years, at any rate on present policies, oil is going to lead to substantial balance of payments surpluses. These surpluses in turn, both by creating excess demand for sterling and, more significantly, through their effects on confidence, will tend to generate upward pressure on the exchange rate.

Should this pressure be welcomed: or even encouraged? The case for doing so rests largely on the connexion between changes in the exchange rate and domestic price infla-

An upward movement in the rate lowers the sterling price of imports. This affects the domestic price level both directly (imports of finished goods) and indirectly (raw materials and intermediate

Furthermore, it can be argued that to the extent that money wage claims are moderated in response to this exchange rate effect on the price level, the initial effect may be considerably magnified as lower increases in money wages mean lower rises in domestic costs of production and thus prices.

If this analysis is correct, an exchange rate policy which allowed or encouraged upward movements would be a powerful weapon in the struggle against inflation. There are, however, serious doubts about this argument for upward movements ing's parity. At the first stage, given the share of import costs in total costs of production, an appreciation in the exchange rate of about 45 per cent is needed to restrain domestic prices by 1 per cent.

The force of the case for a rising rate thus hinges on the of the subsequent pricevage-price response. There are three points about this. First, the response of wages to price increases is substantially removed when an in-comes policy is in operation— unless, of course, wages are explicitly indexed to prices as they were under the "thresh-old agreements." phase of the last Conservative government's

Secondly, in the absence of an incomes policy, the evi- gressive deterioration in the dence for the existence of a competitiveness and volume of close link between wages and non-oil trade would certainly prices is not very strong. This militate may be because the case for a operates asymmetrically a rise in prices, but price restraint may be taken by wagebargainers as a windfall gain in real incomes which would not be "paid for " in terms of con-sequentially restrained increases in money wages.

For all these reasons then, the case for a rising exchange rate as an anti-inflation policy seems rather weak. It is probably worth stressing—though it ought not to be—that rational discussion of exchange rate policy is not helped when talk of sterling's being "strong" or "doing well" necessarily implies a rise in the rate. A change in the parity is "good" when its net effects on the economy are beneficial: whether it is an upward or a downward move-ment which is good in this sense is precisely what is at By contrast, there is a strong case for managing the rate in such a way as at least to pre-serve the current level of United Kingdom price competitiveness in non-oil trade. Depending on the success or otherwise of the control of domestic inflation by other policies, this could even involve attempting to depreciate the meeting to depreciate.

This case turns on drawing a sharp distinction between trade in oil and other trade, A good deal has been said about using the benefits of North Sea oil to "restructure" or "regenerate" British industry.

Most of this talk has been uncomformbly vague about how this is actually to be done.

This could take place in any or all of a variety of ways. First, the current account sur-

Each year since 1974 the country has run a current account deficit of well over $3,000m, reaching $4,250m in 1976 (4.1 per cent of gross domestic product). This year the figure is expected to be much the same.

That is not surprising considering the speed with which wage costs have been increas-ing. The world recession of the past four years has coincided with the end of Franco's rule. The transition to democracy has been marked by very rapid increases in Spanish living standards at a time when the rest of the world was adjusting its expectations downwards. The share of wages in national in-come has shot up from 57 per cent in 1970 to a little over 66 per cent in 1976.

Oil imports have contributed substantially to the worsening trade position. The Spanish Government's reaction to the oil price increase of October 1973 must be held to blame for some of today's problems. Oil consumption was allowed to rise in volume terms despite the huge burden this placed on the balance of payments. Con-sumers have been largely shielded from the price rise in products (apart from The failure to impose a stabilization policy in the immediate aftermath of higher oil prices has increased the need for such a policy now. That process will be painful. For although there have been sharp increases in the living standards of those in work, the country starts its stabilization from a point where unemploy-ment is already high and pros-pects for creating jobs in the future are not good.

Total employment fell last year by 1.3 per cent, with a particularly sharp drop in industrial jobs as firms tried to rationalize production to cope with higher ways bills.

rationalize production to cope with higher wage bills.

The increase in unemployment was predictable and sharp, with even the official statistics (which feel to record everyone) showing a rise from 42 per cent of the work force to 5.1 per cent. The future prospects are made bleaker by the fact that investment hardly grew at all last year after grew at all last year after recording a 3 per cent fall in

For an economy as badly in newest democracy will be very need of a structural shift severe indeed.

duct it occupies 23 per cent of the workforce, and the inevitable drift from the land seems certain to go on. Yet manufacturing is not taking up the workers released from the land; a failing which is not new (almost half the workers leaving agriculture in the sixties went into the service sector) The reason for this lies in the particular kind of industrialization which Spain has pursued, aimed at heavily capital intensive industries rather than producing goods with a higher labour content. That strategy was aimed at making Spain a modern industrial country as quickly as possible, the sort of nation which could seek and expect to find acceptance wishin the EEC. Membership of the Commu-nity would be above all of political importance to Spain, since it would provide a ticket of respectability. But economically it would also be important. Spanish agriculture could expect to benefit heavily But the EEC summit meeting in London a few weeks ago, showed that these benefits will be delayed for some time. For the next few years at least Spain will have to carry on outside.

In trying to do so, devaluation can only be a first step. It will have to be followed up by a domestic austerity package to make sure that the advantages gained are not eaten away as the advantages gained from the 10 per cent devaluation in February of last year were eroded by higher import prices leading to more wage demands.

Whether any Spanish government will be able to enforce such a programme and stick to such a programme and stick to it remains to be seen. Certainly the pressures on Europe's

Clyde Pet rejection

Another stinging salvo has been fired by Clyde Petroleum in its effort to gain control of motor vehicle to ship building and repairing company Lyon &:

In a two-page letter to share-holders, Mr W. Gibson Biggart, chairman of Clyde, denounces the Lyon board's rejection document and hits out at the directors themselves.

"In a four-year period of wages/dividend restraint, your board's aggregate emoluments have risen founfold until they actually exceeded the amount paid ont as dividends to Ordinary shareholders", says Mr Biggart. And he adds that although the directors hold beneficially under 4 per cent of the ordinary shares, they have refused to discuss the offer with the Clyde board. Mr Michael Lyon, chairman, proposed raising the 1977 dividend from 3.48p to 9.24p but this, says Clyde, would result in the assets of the company being converted into income in the short term. There is no guarantee that such a dividend could again be earned or repeated, they added.

And Clyde points out that Lyons 1976 report and accounts include quoted investments of value of £127,000. "No provision for this loss was made either in the profit and loss account or in the balance sheet."

In addition to its petroleum interest Clyde is involved in vehicle assembly and distribution and promise stability of employment to the workforce. In contrast there has been a staff reduction of more than 50 per cent in the past five years, says Mr Biggart. Under the terms of the bid, Clyde are offering 50p cash a share, against a pre-offer price of 40p. The price is now standing at 60p reflecting, says Mr Biggart, hopes of a higher offer or an alternative bidder.

The Clyde offer has been extended until Friday, July 22.

Wilkinson Match sparks in Lyon & Lyon 30 pc rise to top £12m

By Desmond Quigley
Wilkinson Match increased pre-tax profits by 30 per cent to £12.3m in the year to the end of last March. This is the first time it has exceeded the £11.3m made in the first year of the merger back in 1973-74.

Turnover rose by 21 per cent to £183m, while operating profit rose 19 per cent to £15.3m. But a cut in interest payments from £3.3m to £2.9m provided the extra rise at the pre-tax level. However, with a net extraordinary gain of 54,000 against the previous year's debit of £1.52m, the ner attributable profit jumped from £2.04m to £4.52m. With the total gross dividend increased by the maximum per-missible to 12.67p a share, the shares, up 5p to 156p yesterday, are yielding 8.12 per cent and selling at just over eight times earnings of 18.83p a share. Although WM has sorted out most of its post-merger prob-lems there are still a few areas to a crossroads in its development: the eventual decline of licensing income, which will begin to tail off as the float giass licences expire from 1982 onwards, is now close enough to be a factor affecting the share price, while the potential of the group's new develop-ments is still largely an unknown quantity.

In the meantime Pilkington's expansion programme, financed largely from royalties, which has taken £300m in the last 10 years, is levelling off. Inveresk rights seek to raise £2.1m towards expansion

By Alison Mizchell
On the back of pre-tax profits up more than fourfold at the helf-way stage, Inveresk Group has announced a one-for-four right issue at 53p to raise 12 in. This offers a 21 per cent discount on yesterday's 67p share price.

But there is to be no dividend increese above the permissible 10 per cent. Even without Government restrictions that would be the appropriate amount the board would raise the dividend this year, says Mr Thomas Corrigan, chairman.

An interim dividend 2.1154p gross and an expected 5.2546p final will give shareholders a 7.37p total.

The money raised will be used primarily to finance the group's capital investment programme. Over the past two years expenditure on plant and muchinery has totalled £3.9m and Mr Corrigan estimates that spending will cominue at the rate of £2m to £2.5m annually. Earlier this year the group announced at £3.2m modernization and expansion scheme for Carrongrove Paper Mill in Stirlingshire, financed in the main by the Scottish Development Agency and Government and local authority grants. fight and expensive all day.

From 71-7 per cent which raied throughout the morning, rates firmed in the afternoon to around 71 per cent then mored up to close within a band of 8 per cent to 72 per cent.

Adverse factors affecting the credit flow were run-down balances brought over from Monday by the banks, a slight net Treasury bill take-up, a modest continuing outflow of notes, and settlement for a few gilts sold by the Government Broker the previous day.

The only plus item of any consequence was a modest figure for excess of Exchequer disbursements over Revenue receipts. At the end of the day it looked as though the help from the authorities was probably not enough.
